Megan Lawton

Dr Megan Lawton is the Senior Advisor for Academic Practice in the College of Learning and Teaching at the University of Wolverhampton. Her Doctorate and area of expertise is in learning and teaching in Higher Education (HE). She is a Principal Fellow of and assessor for the Higher Education Academy.

She teaches on the Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education and Professional Practice and supervises students on the Masters and Doctorate in Education programmes.

She is a very experienced teacher in HE and runs many staff development workshops both in the UK and for overseas partnerships, for instance with China, Myanmar and Sri Lanka.

Her areas of research include; inclusive curriculum design, flipped learning, patchwork text assessment, transnational education and visual research methodology. Megan has two children at Bedstone College.

She is dyslexic and is very proud of Bedstone's learning support, which was one of the main reasons that she transferred her children to the school many years ago and only wishes she had been able to go to a school like Bedstone herself.
